Dear Camera Recycler,

We at Independent Photo Tech Service (IPTS) are happy to partner with you in helping to keep the Earth a cleaner place. There are a few issues we wanted to address with you regarding our camera recycling program and how we can work together to make this an environmentally rewarding and profitable venture for us both. Most of the cameras you recycle with IPTS are reloaded and reused by retail customers. We prefer this method of recycling because it utilizes 100% of the camera and nothing goes to the landfill. However, there are some quality control issues we need to make you aware of.

- 1) Your cameras are valuable and fragile electronic products. It is important that you treat them with reasonable care and don't throw, drop, or cause them undue harm.
- 2) When removing the film from the disposable cameras please be careful. If you crack open the main plastic body or otherwise mutilate the camera body it is unusable. Most cameras are made to open easily by removing a breakaway panel. Instructions to open are printed on the camera.
- 3) When you ship cameras to IPTS please ensure the box you are sending them in is completely full of disposable cameras and taped shut well.
- 4) Please do not send us your rubbish with the cameras. Please discard film containers, cartridges, used batteries, and other items somewhere other than the camera recycling box.
- 5) IPTS weighs, inspects, and sorts your cameras as we receive them so you receive your check promptly. Considering the market, we offer a premium price for your cameras. We don't want to contact you about rubbish or excessively damaged cameras in your shipment.

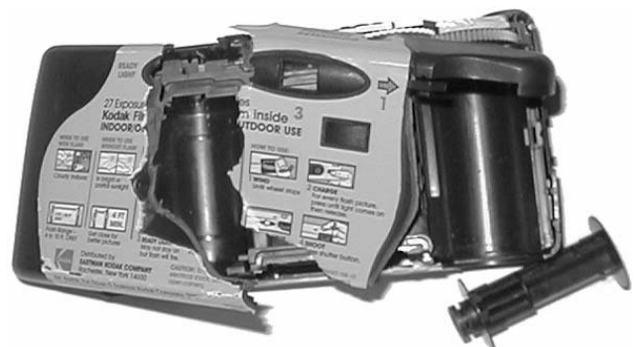

IPTS would like to continue offering a premium per-pound price and free shipping for your disposable cameras. However, we need your and your employees help preserving this product. We believe recycling is a noble, resourceful, and profitable effort and we are honored to partner with you in it.

Sincerely,

Scott Searcy, CEO IPTS
